New nucleic acid encoding cyclic-GMP stimulated nucleotide phosphodi:esterase - and related vectors and transformed cells, useful for screening cpds. for phospho-di:esterase modulating activity.

Example 5; Col 79-86; 69pp; English.

ţ AAQ81977 encodes AAR69728 the bovine brain cyclic-GMP stimulated nuclectide phospho-diesterase (CaM PDE) clone pBBCGSPDB-7. Eukaryotic cells that express CaM PDE can be used to screen cpds. for the ability modulate caM PDE activity. CaM PDEs are involved in regulating the transmission of information from hormones, neurotransmitters or other systems that use cyclic nucleotides as messengers. Antibodies raised against CaM PDE can be used for enzyme purificn., or determination. (Updated on 25-MAR-2003 to correct PF field.)

This sequence represents the cyclic GMP stimulated phosphodiesterase (GGS -PDE) clone pBBCGSPDE-5 isolated from bovine brain. This sequence is nearly identical to the bovine adrenal gland GGS-PDE isozyme. The cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterases (PDBS) catalyse the hydrolysis of 3', 5' cyclic nucleotide monophosphates. The PDEs are therefore important in the control of the cellular concentration of cyclic nucleotides. The PDEs are therefore important in the control of the cellulate of transmembrane signals or second messenger are, in turn, regulated by transmembrane signals or second messenger cole in regulating the flow of information from extracellular hormones, neurotransmitters, or other signals that use the cyclic nucleotides as messengers. PDEs are present in most of the cells and tissues of messengers. PDEs are present in most of the cells and tissues of cukaryotic organisms, but only in trace amounts cGS-PDE are stimulated by cGMP in effecting cAMP hydrolysis. This is thought to occur through a normalytic cGMP specific site present on the cGS-PDE. The DNA encoding this sequence can be used for the production of recombinant cGS-PDE, which may have therapeutic and diagnostic uses. This sequence may also be currect PP field.)

The present sequence represents the pBBCGSPDE-7 bovine brain insert amino acid sequence. The large open reading frame encodes a 942-readine polypeptide that is nearly identical to the adrenal gland cyclic-GMP-stimulated phosphodisererase (GGS-PDE) isozyme. The difference in the primary structure of the two isozymes lies in the amino-terminal residues remaining carboxy-terminal residues 1.5 of the adrenal GGS-PDE, and residues in both are identical. The DNA sequences of the GGS-PDE's are used for the production of the recombinant earymes, which in turn may be used for antibody production and to screen for compounds that modulate phosphodisererase activity. level. They are controlled by second messengers e.g. Ca2+ and calmodulin and transmembrane signals and through pathways involving these, regulate flow of information from extracellular hormones, neurotransmitters and other signals using cyclic mucleotides as messengers. The specification describes an assay for identifying a chemical agent which modifies the enzymatic activity of a mammalian CaM-PDE. The assays are useful for identifying modulators of CaM-PDEs. The assays is carried out by incubating cells expressing CaM-PDE with the suspected modulator and measuring its effect e.g. monitoring the hydrolysis of CAMP and/or CGMP bovine brain, is one of several phosphodiseterases isolated in this invention. The phosphodiseterases were used to transform host cells, preferably mammalian or yeast cells. The recombinant proteins and fragments produced can be used for therapeutic, diagnostic, and prognostic purposes and will provide the basis for preparation of monoclonal and polytolonal antibodies. An antibody specific for the ca2+/calmodulin-stimulated cyclic nucleotide phosphodiseterase (PDE) polypeptide is useful for affinity purification or detection of the polypeptide and is selective only for the Ca2+/calmodulin stimulated

The specification describes calcium ion/calmodulin stimulated cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterases (CaM-PDEs). CaM-PDEs are characterised by their responsiveness to intracellular calcium, which leads to a decreased intracellular concentration of cAMP and/or cGMP. CaM-PDEs, and their fragments or synthetic peptides, are used in and their reagencies and diagnosis. They are also used to generate specific antibodies useful as immunoassay reagents for detecting the protein or for affinity purification and for identifying specific modulators of CaM-PDE activity. CaM-PDEs are implicated in signalling involving extracellular hormones and neurotransmitters, so selective inhibitors are potentially useful as

The invention relates to purified and isolated polynucleotide sequence encoding a mammalian Ca^2+/calmodulin- or cyclic GMP-stimulated cyclic conclosed phosphodiesterase polypeptide (CaMP-DE and cGS-PDE). Also included are a DNA vector comprising the novel DNA sequence, a host cell transformed with the polynucleotide sequence, a polypeptide product of the expression in the transformed host cell, an antibody specifically immunoreactive with the polypeptide and assay methods for identifying a chemical agent which modifies the enzymatic activity of a mammalian CaMP-DE or cGS-PDE. Disclosed are the cDNA and protein sequences of bovine S9KDB CAM-PDE, 61kDB CAM-PDE, G3kDB CAM-PDE, cGS-PDE and human 61kDa CAM-
